Arido América Winter Plan

The Diego de la Vega Coffee Co-op offers organic coffee sourced locally in Chiapas from Zapatista autonomous farms. Cups of coffee can be traded for alternative currency, barter, services, time deposits (as well, as voluntary money donations). But if you don't have much on you, test your connection to the impartial meso-american energy known as Xochipilli.

Patolli was forbidden in 1521 by Spanish colonial powers because it was both a ritual to the god of Art, Games, Love, Music, Poetry, and Magical plants, as well as a powerful way to activate a commons economy based on potlach and use value, that managed to escape crown coffers taxation.

Community Chest

The offerings done within Patolli go towards the Commons and they will be either randomized or be available upon request (it is still being discussed what the protocol will be). In any case they will have use-value if they are earned as part of the redistribution wealth within Patolli. But if not, they can be traded by bartering or purchased with Digital Material Sunflowers after they are subject to price appraisal.

Digital Material Sunflower

An alternative currency managed by Spacebank's Digital Material Central Bank, a body that at the moment consists of 20,000 votes that administer its reserve basket according to a changing set of goals and targets that are defined by its invisible stakeholders. The DMS is the official currency of the Variable Network State.

It is currently used by a few collectives and individuals in New York City, Mexico City, Cancun, Liverpool, Tijuana, Bogota, Dallas, Tecamac, Tecate, Zagreb, Berlin, Quito, Pipa, Oaxaca, Wien and globally by Spacebank clients.

There are Access Points, Banks, Nodes, Money exchanges and pockets that are independently owned and are not a part of Spacebank. You can start your own by getting in contact with Spacebank. The DMS is a floating currency, for more info download 'Currency Converter - Money Exchange Rates for more than 220 currencies!' widget in for Mac and iPhone.
